Bloomberg Media Studios + PGIM - The OUTThinking Investor Podcast

Bloomberg Media Studios

Background

PGIM, Inc., the asset management arm of the life insurance company, Prudential Financial, wanted to promote thought leadership and enhance the relevance of its experts within key institutional investment trends. To do this, PGIM teamed up with Bloomberg Media to tell the origin stories of the financial instruments many take for granted. To get this message out, they created The OUTThinking Investor podcast, supported by video and social media, and promoted across the Bloomberg ecosystem. Best Branding Campaign B2B

Aon - The Aon Story

Background

Aon, a global professional services firm, shapes decisions for the better and protects and enriches the lives of people around the world. To build greater familiarity with Aon's evolving capabilities, it created the Aon Story campaign. Tactics for the campaign included a developed brand aesthetic, its first-ever global media buy, highly visible business TV, digital and print ads, media relations efforts focused on thought leadership, an award-winning podcast, internal communications, social activations and shifting its go-to-market strategy.

Insights

As Aon sought to tell its story to the broadest possible target audience and increase overall brand awareness, it identified four categories of need: navigating new forms of volatility, building a resilient workforce, rethinking access to capital and addressing the underserved. The Aon Story campaign addressed these categories across multiple media channels and outlets to demonstrate how the firm handles organizations' emerging and unmet needs in an increasingly volatile world. As of June 2022, the digital assets delivered over 78 million ad impressions with consistent above-benchmark CTR.

Best Branding Campaign B2C

Publicis New York + Zenith + PSOne - 'Lil Jif'

Background

The J.M. Smucker Company looked to win over younger consumers so Jif could break through, gaining attention and relevance over its biggest rival and increasing its category share. Jif needed to be authentic to accomplish this, so the company crafted a comprehensive program. The first step was creating a new rap sound from an unexpected artist – Ludacris – to release a Jif-inspired song using a mouthful of Jif without mentioning the brand, then reveal Jif's connection to the new sound by releasing a music video and engage with young peanut butter lovers through a TikTok challenge where Ludacris invites fans to try out his unique flow. The campaign successfully fueled interest in the brand, especially among the younger target audience, while remaining inclusive for all generations of peanut butter lovers.

Insights

Through this creative campaign, Jif achieved the highest market share in over 10 years and was able to grow while the category began to contract after a big boost from initial covid grocery spending. Jif overtook Skippy's leading share of voice to become more than double Skippy's share and became a TikTok sensation, with people of all ages joining in on the challenge – with a "mouthful of Jif" search traffic spiking with the challenge but continuing to rise steadily months after launch – consumers were convinced by the campaign and increased consideration.

Vaseline - 'See My Skin'

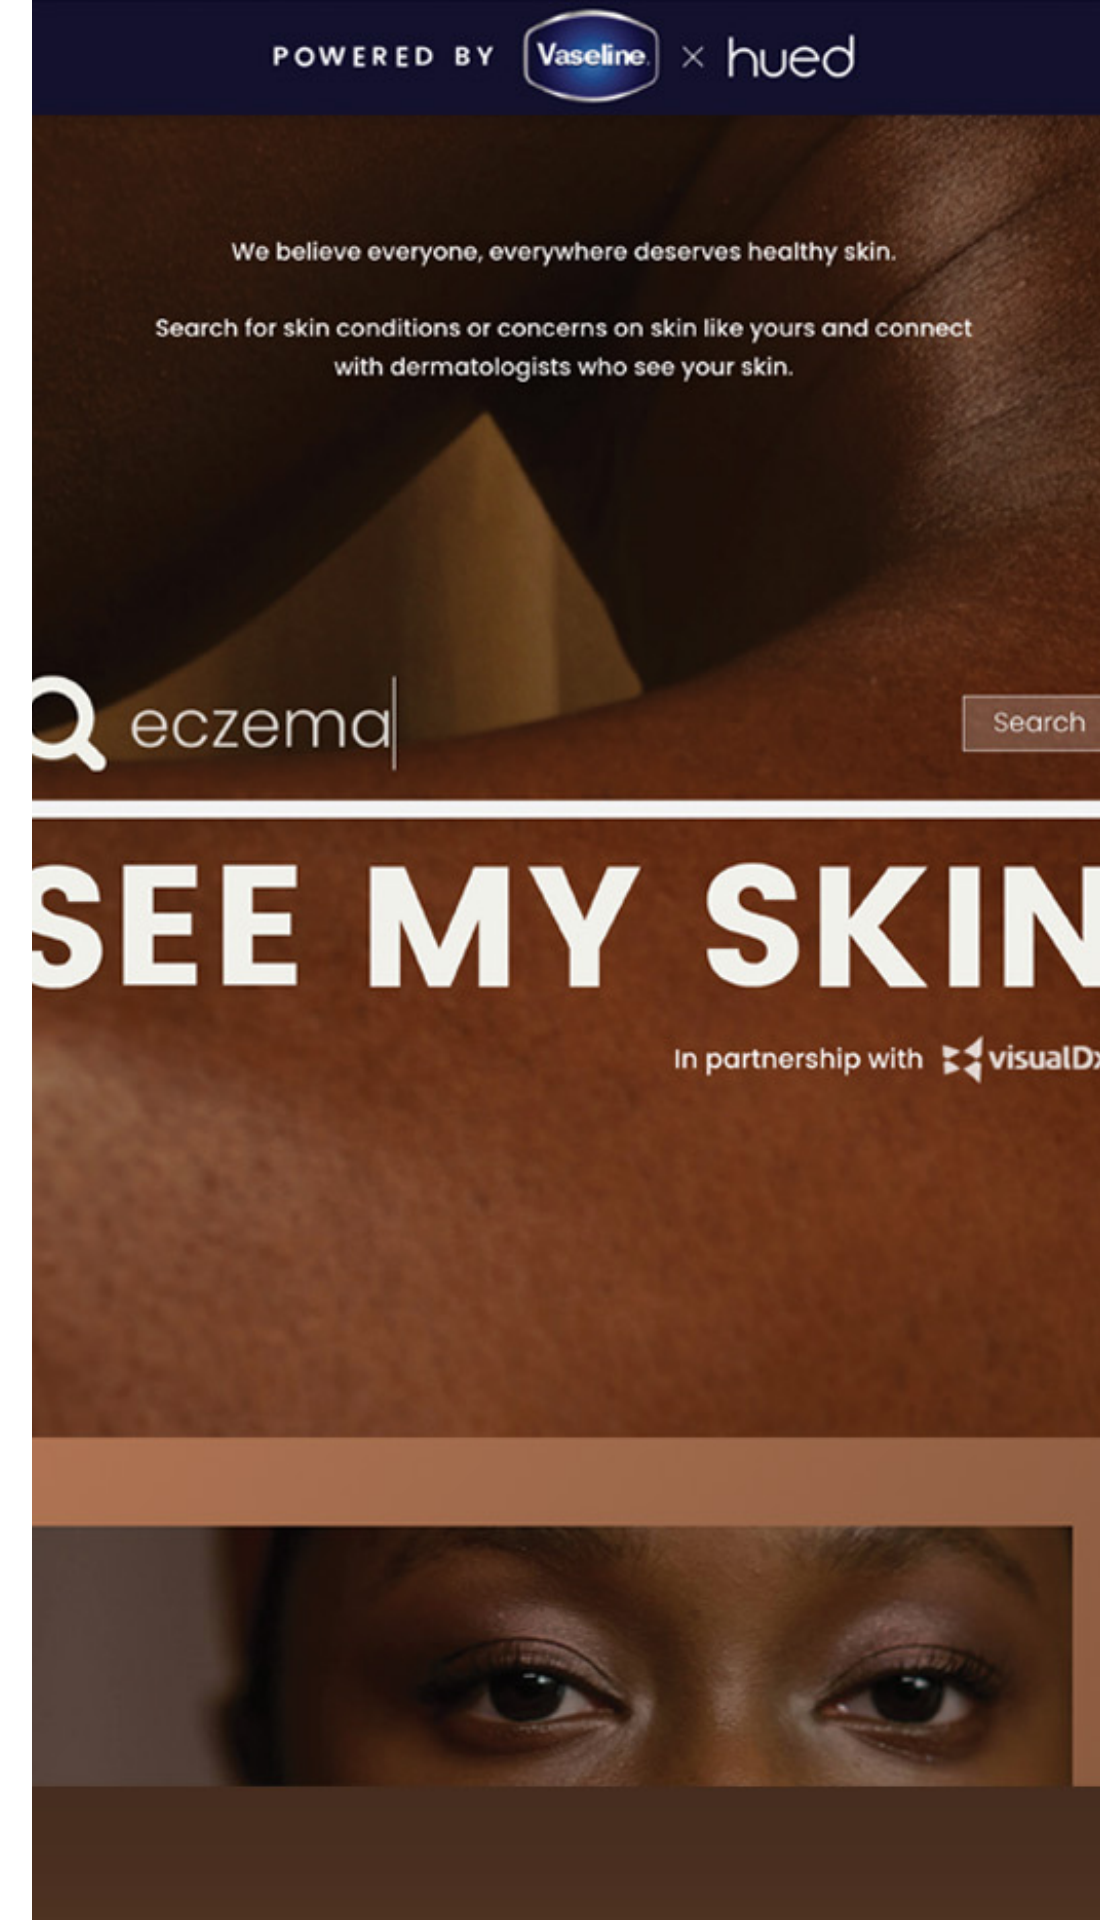

Background

For over 150 years, Vaseline has been passionate about healing all skin, from the everyday to the toughest conditions. To address a systemic barrier preventing proper diagnosis and treatment in people of color, Vaseline created 'See My Skin,' a database designed to search conditions applicable to skin of color – something no search engine had done before. In doing this, Vaseline was committed to raising awareness of the racially biased systems that impact algorithmic search, providing proper representation and access to equal care, and, most of all, helping Black and Hispanic people be seen.

Insights

By aggregating thousands of images of hundreds of conditions on Black and Brown skin, Vaseline built the world's most diverse medical image library and enabled people of color to see only themselves in search for the first time. The brand broke down barriers to equitable care and did what search engines and the industry failed to address: the long-standing bias and exclusion of people of color in skin care. Fifty-nine percent of organic views came from users searching for a specific skin image or skin-related concern, and 48% of those who searched on the site were empowered to advocate for themselves and take action, resulting in an increase of 1,430% of people seeking dermatological care.

Edelman + eBay - Wear Em Out Store

Background

Sneaker culture has become more mainstream, leading the industry to become bombarded by bots and greedy resellers buying up releases seconds after they drop, only to flip them for a profit. This leaves many sneakerheads unable to afford the pairs they want to wear. eBay saw an opportunity to support true sneakerheads and bring a sense of community back to sneaker culture and built the Wear 'Em Out Store, a retail experience that gave shoppers a choice of paying the full resale price and keeping sneakers in "deadstock" or new condition or wear them out of the store for a significant discount.

Insights

eBay sought to drive awareness of its sneakers by keeping the brand top of mind among sneakerheads and increasing positive sentiment of eBay sneakers within sneaker culture. The Wear 'Em Out Store broke through with top sneaker culture, lifestyle, music and local LA media outlets and received feature coverage in Vibe, Complex, Input and Los Angeles Mag. The campaign drove WEO content engagement and store traffic via social media, with the Twitter announcement surpassing the industry benchmark view rate by 4,205%. The "Wear 'Em Out" message was well received, with ESSENCE writing that the store "gave true sneakerheads in the LA area the experience they needed."

Paramount+ + Giant Spoon + Sky Elements + Drone Dudes

Background

To promote its new series, 'Halo: The Series,' Paramount wanted to use a bold and unique approach that pulled in elements from the show – based on the critically acclaimed video game – an epic 26th-century conflict between humanity and an alien threat, the Covenant, that draws on personal stories with action, adventure and a richly imagined vision of the future. In partnership with the South by Southwest (SXSW) Film Festival, 400 drones flew in synchronized formation depicting iconic imagery from the Halo universe, stretching 600 feet across the night sky above Austin. This was the city's first-ever drone light show and culminated with a QR code that took viewers to a branded microsite where they could watch the new trailer for the series.

Insights

The drone activation allowed onlookers to witness Paramount's dedication to offering Halo fans a new way to enjoy their favorite science fiction adventure. Repeat performances of the event ensured a maximum number of witnesses to the out-of-this-world display, with countless fan recordings displaying the one-of-a-kind drone show. Given the robust efforts by Paramount to promote 'Halo: The Series,' expectations were high for the show. Upon release, it broke the streaming service's previous record for new series premiere viewership of nearly 5 million viewers.

In response, H&R Block created the A Fair Shot program, sponsoring 19 female college athletes, including basketball star Zia Cooke, and kicking off a multichannel campaign. The social activation for A Fair Shot centered around a TikTok hashtag challenge, fronted by Cooke, which asked audiences to "Imagine a World" where women college athletes had the same opportunities as their male counterparts.
